Vaillancourt fired

Political Science Professor Pauline Vaillancourt has been fired by the McGill Administration. Vaillancourt is secretary of the McGill Faculty Union and is the MFU's delegate to the Montreal Council of the CNTU, with which the MFU is affiliated. The Quebec Labour Department has been asked to investigate the firing, which, according to Vaillancourt, is in retaliation for her union activities.

Vaillancourt was formally notified December 13 by the Board of Governors that her contract, which expires in August, would not be renewed. The decision was supposedly based on an appraisal of two papers she had written and on alleged student complaints. When the hearing into her firing opened at McGill, she was not permitted by the Appeal Committee to present her other papers or published articles as evidence in her defense.

MFU president Immanuel Wallerstein, speaking during the appeal, questioned "the mode of operation of the Committee," which made an important decision such as the firing of a professor "without having read the totality of the professor's contribution." The university claims that the reasons for Vaillancourt's firing are "substandard teaching ability" and lack of "academic and administrative contributions."

In the Political Science Department's own questionnaire, 85% of her students, when asked to rate her teaching as "adequate" or "inadequate", rated it adequate. And she has received testimonies from leaders in the field of political science in Quebec and elsewhere, saying that not only is her work satisfactory, but that she deserves to be promoted on the strength of her academic achievement.

Vaillancourt recently obtained a $21,000 research grant from the Quebec Department of Social Affairs to study the cooperative movement in Quebec.

The matter, which till now has been considered only on a department level, is currently in the hands of Robert Vogel, Dean of Arts, who has scheduled a February 1 meeting of his advisory committee to consider the matter. Vogel was unavailable for comment.

The Labour Department hearing will probably be held sometime next month.

Cafeteria food rated nauseous

A report delivered to the Sir George Williams Food Services Policy Committee has criticized the McGill Student Union cafeteria for having terrible food, dirty premises, and dirty and broken dishes.

According to the Sir George paper Issues and Events, the report claims that the 40 per cent frozen patty hamburgers are actually composed mostly of cereal, that the french fries are presalted and greasy, and that the turkey is bad and "odd"; also, the turkey gravy is excessively salty.

The mashed potatoes are, the report says, "old and sticky". Coffee sold over the counter is "muddy and undrinkable", while coffee from the vending machines is "mostly water".

The report noted that the cafeteria is violating at least three laws. First, recycled plastic cutlery is used; second, there is eating in the halls; third, the staff have no hairnets and, in fact, there is hair "all over the place".

The Pizza Parlour was criticized in the report for having dirty trays all over the floor and for having stale and greasy pastries.

The two researchers who prepared the report concluded that the McGill cafeteria is a bad eating choice and should be closed, adding that they became "excessively ill" and developed "symptoms of indigestion and nausea within a few hours after eating at McGill."

How to hide a demonstration

by Julian Sher

According to the Montreal Star and the Gazette, it didn't happen.

Those 2,000 or so people that participated in last Saturday's Vietnam demonstration didn't exist. The riot squad that was out in full gear was only imagining things. And the many downtown shoppers who stopped to watch the blocks-long procession were equally deceived.

The two major English-language papers in Quebec completely ignored the event—not a photograph, a story, or word. They weren't alone in suppressing the news.

Le Devoir, which often prints articles the English papers would never touch, made no mention of the demonstration. The final edition of La Presse was equally uninformative. Only the Sunday Express and Montréal-Matin told their readers something happened on Saturday, but the facts they gave were minimal. The English tabloid had a picture of the flag-burning on its front page, but no story or information. The French tabloid gave perhaps the best coverage in Montreal, with a picture and a round-up of demonstrations around the globe.

Television news was little better. On its Saturday night national broadcast, CTV was kind enough to talk about the Montreal march, but gave no numbers and conspicuously avoided showing any full crowd shots. CBC, meanwhile, mentioned that Montreal was one of the many cities around the world that witnessed anti-war protests.

The local TV news obviously had to be a little more explicit, considering that thousands of Montrealers either participated or watched the demonstration. But distortion crept in here as well. In terms of numbers, Channel 12 said "several hundred persons"; Channel 6 reported that "about 200 people" demonstrated outside the American consulate. A glance at any picture of the crowd or a questioning of any participant shows that these reports are not merely errors or oversights, but blatant lies. Policemen queried during the demonstration placed the figure at 2,000. A popular estimate among demonstrators was 1,500. The exact number is not important, and would be hard to come by at any rate since the size of the procession varied at different times. But the lies of the media are undeniable. CBC went so far as to state that the turnout fell short of the 1,000 expected by the demonstration organizers! In fact, one of the organizers, in answer to a query from a CBC reporter about the "disappointing" turnout, said that the demonstration—the largest in Montreal for several years—must be seen in the context of world-wide protests against the war. CBC didn't run the interview.

Far more subtle than the networks' games with numbers, however, was their reportage of the make-up of the demonstration. CTV saw the demonstrators as "young Maoists, communists, and other left-wing groups", while CBC noted that "Americans and South Vietnamese" played "leading roles" in the protest. Foreign agents, no doubt!

In fact, Saturday's demonstration was sponsored by some 30 popular organizations in Montreal—including almost every left-wing group—in cooperation with the Association of Vietnamese Patriots. Many liberals participated in the protest, as well as some people who had never demonstrated before in their lives. Several McGill professors were also present. The massive protest, then, was not composed of foreign agitators or communists—but it was most definitely led and organized by communists on very radical lines.

That is what frightens the media, and that explains its silence.

During the week before the demonstration, the media, busy promoting the latest flurry of peace talks, refused to attend a news conference on the protest, because, as they argued, peace was at hand and anti-war actions were just not news anymore. At the same time, however, a local TV station ran a short news item on one of its broadcasts about an alleged "split" in the Montreal anti-war movement. The item mentioned that the Vietnam Moratorium Committee—an anti-war coalition supported by what the commercial press likes to call "the more conservative, pro-Soviet" Communist Party—was planning a "March of Death" on Friday evening, and that "Maoists and Trotskyists" would march on Saturday in a demonstration that might possibly lead to violence.

Friday night's rainy "March of Death"—organized on traditional liberal anti-war principles—drew about 100 people. (The Star buried the story on the back page of the seventh section of its Saturday edition).

But some 2,000 people turned out for Saturday's demonstration—a protest that the established media had billed as communist, a protest that was organized, not on traditional "peace now" slogans but on an open anti-imperialist basis. The denunciation was of imperialism, not only of war. The call was not for North Americans to shudder at the immorality of the Vietnam war, but for the Quebec people to express solidarity with the Indochinese people against imperialism.

And 2,000 people came.

Now the commercial media could hardly go around advertising that some 2,000 communists were marching in the streets of Montreal. And to say that 2,000 people, led by communists, was equally embarrassing. What to do? The best tactic was to pretend the whole thing never happened—as the English papers did. The next best move was to deflate the importance of the event—as local television did.

The media's handling of Saturday's demonstration is not an isolated case of distortion, though it is undoubtedly an exceptionally blatant one. The media—even those elements within it which "oppose" the war—has a long history of serving American imperial interests in Indochina; fostering myths of Tonkin and "North Vietnamese invasions", denying the legitimacy of forces like the NLF and PRG which control more people and territory than "President" (read: puppet) Thieu, etc. More recently, a good part of the media swallowed Kissinger's allegations that the peace talks broke off because the Vietnamese demanded basic changes in the accords, despite the fact that the Vietnamese continued to ask Nixon to sign the treaty, as it stood, any time he was ready. This week, the media is going all out in promoting the 9-point agreement that is expected to be signed shortly. But how much mention is there of the recent and continued American actions that undermine peace—the 10,000 "civilian" advisors, and the massive buildup of the Saigon war machine? How much mention is there of the acknowledgement by the Vietnamese of the inevitable sabotage of the peace agreements by the U.S.? The Vietnamese have already stated that the signing of the agreement will not mean peace, but only a new phase of the war. Yet for the commercial media, "peace is at hand" and American "involvement" in South East Asia is drawing to a close.

After all, the Nixon administration has stopped bombing the north. Now, American planes are only bombing the hell out of the south.

N.Y. to Burlington, Vermont. I met a female student from McGill University. She gave me her address, but my sister accidentally threw it in the garbage. Could you please find her address for me, if possible? Her last name is spelled either ANDERSON or ANDERSEN. I plan to visit Montreal to see if I'd like McGill as my college for next year. She said she'd show me McGill and the city.

Sir,

I'm a senior in the East Islip High School on Long Island. I figured that the editor of a school newspaper as large as yours knows a lot of people and has access to records. On December 28, 1972, I was flying from Albany,

The evil of totalitarianism

Sir,

The McGill Progressive Conservative Association finds the totalitarian stand of the McGill Students' Society Council members unacceptable. The Vietnam resolution passed is reputedly a public statement of what most McGill students think, yet no referendum was held.

Vice-President Weiner said during the discussion of the resolution that "Council has to take a progressive stand", yet Council continued on to vote on a resolution in the name of the whole student body.

If you disagree in any way with the resolution, then Council has ignored you. They were not elected on this issue. They should not be the McGill Students' censor nor moral conscience.

McGill P.C. Association

Righteous...

Sir,

I feel that the McGill Students' Council has overstepped its authority in claiming to represent the McGill student body in its recent resolution on Viet Nam. The resolution represents the opinions of the Council members themselves and not those of the student body. Any resolution in the name of the Students' Society is supposed to be in the name of the students.

Stephen Goldberg

...Indignation

Sir,

The recent resolution on Vietnam passed by Council is an infringement of the basic principle of the Council in that it in no way can claim to represent the students as a whole. The Council members were elected to administer the affairs of the Students' Society, not as the students' conscience. The resolution is a blatant misrepresentation of many students' feelings. This resolution should have been passed in the name of the Council members only. I hope to see Council rectify their mistake.

Pucksters lose in final seconds

Just a bit more organization, coordination, hustle... and two more goals would have assured the Redmen an easy victory in Friday night's match against the Sherbrooke Vert et Or. As it was, although Sherbrooke came up with a mediocre performance, McGill could muster only three goals against their four in a game viewed by approximately 150 spectators at the Winter Stadium.

In post-Christmas play, under their new coach Herb Madill, the Redmen have come up with a 4-4 tie against Trois Rivières and this game's 4-3 loss, consolidating their last place position in the QUAA standings. Sherbrooke, who holds second spot, fared little better than the Redmen, playing an unsystematic and erratic game of hockey.

In the first period McGill effectively killed off two penalties and tallied in the final minute of play on a drive from the right side by Bert Hould, assists going to Peter Leger and Toby O'Brien. Their moment of glory was short-lived however, as Sherbrooke's Paul Dion scored at 11:34 of the second period assisted by Gougeon and Courtemanche on a play that had Paquin doing the splits. Just over a minute later the Vert et Or's Sylvio Rehel slipped the puck between the legs of the Redmen goalie. The score was 2-2 at the end of the period on a power play goal as Webster took a pass from Ned Dowd and tucked the puck under a prostrate Sherbrooke goalie.

The two teams played a closer checking game in the third period as Sherbrooke tallied twice, McGill once. Sherbrooke's first goal came at 8:46 while the Redmen were a man short, Andre Boisvert gave the puck a gentle tap past Paquin who had turned his head the other way and closed his eyes on the play. McGill replied with just over a minute left in the period on a quick drive by Fernandes from Webster and O'Brien, tying the contest at 3-3. The ensuing standing ovation and whistling so dazed the players that with the glorious prospect of a tie, they sat down and allowed Sherbrooke to put another point on the scoreboard just 24 seconds later. With under a minute to play in the game Paquin headed for the showers but the score remained 4-3 in Sherbrooke's favour.

There were no fights despite close calls when George Parker attempted a piggy-back ride on the back of a Sherbrooke player and when Ned Dowd's hand found a place on the face of the opposition's goalie as he skated by. Minor skirmishes however failed to result in any appreciable belligerence as McGill picked up four penalties; Sherbrooke five. Redmen Neil Fernandes, Ned Dowd, and Jimmy Webster handed in fine performances as did Sherbrooke's goalie Duquette.

The only consolation the Redmen can reap from Friday night's encounter is in the fact that they didn't fall any lower in the standings. One fan summed up the match suitably with a grumble, "I wish they'd quit 'fluffin' around!" A return 'fluff' will be held this Friday in Sherbrooke. Just a two hour jaunt... see you there.

Play-by-play

This coming season in the American League there will be three new letters at the bottom of the Box Scores: DPH - Designated Pinch Hitter. The rule is that the manager must decide before the game whether he will use the DPH in place of his pitcher. If he decides to use it he must write it in on his lineup card and stick with that hitter for the entire game. Neither the starting pitcher nor any reliever may bat in the game.

If I were voting for this rule I would turn it down. For one, I feel that any rule that would allow a ballplayer to come to bat 4-5 times a game without playing the field or running the bases would destroy the value of the game. I feel that the fans appreciate the total athlete. The new rule reduces the pitcher to a mere showpiece. As it is, the pitcher must be concerned for his teammates if he is a poor hitter. The new rule would also enable players such as Willie Mays, Al Kaline or Frank Robinson to stick around collecting $100,000 or more a year just for pinch hitting. It would make existing batting records meaningless if these stars were retained simply to bat 500 times a year.

Pitchers aren't going to like this ridiculous rule, that is, from a pitching standpoint. They can no longer look forward to an easy out from the ninth spot in the batting order. Also, in a situation which calls for a bunt, most pitchers, while they can not hit a lick, are very proficient at bunting which is a very important weapon in any team's offense. If you look down the list of DPH's in the American League you will see that many of them are old sluggers hanging on for a few more years who, when it comes to moving a baserunner along with a bunt, or hitting behind the runner, are pitiful.

The American League adopted this rule because they thought that the game lacked offense and that the rule would provide the fans with much needed excitement. But if you put in a DPH to hit for Bob Gibson or Steve Carlton you are guaranteeing that they will be in for the whole game. If they are leading, let's say 1-0 in the later innings, the other team will have to face a Gibson or Carlton who is as strong as he was in the early innings. Under other circumstances, if they were taken out of the game the club would have a chance to score runs off of a lesser pitcher.

Being what people call a fanatic about the game I am totally happy with it as it is. If next season the American League teams score 1 or 2 more runs per game, then maybe I can be convinced that the rule is a plus for baseball. Balls and Strikes... The McGill Redmen under new coach Herb Madill are 0-1-1 with a 4-4 tie in Three Rivers and a 4-3 loss against Sherbrooke... The Montreal Expos are moving their whole spring training complex to new improved quarters at Daytona Beach, Florida... Shipstads and Johnson's Ice Follies will be featuring Trixi Schuba, the Olympic and World Champion of 1972, at the Montreal Forum from Jan. 30 to Feb. 5...
